While the clearest results are achieved using the Brush toolbar, the Express Tools panel has gained some power and convenience in Lightroom CC's 4.2 update. For example, many of the tools now have their own commands in a context menu where you can type a short abbreviation like 'Cr' to switch to the 'Curves' panel or 'R' to switch to the 'Recolor' panel. Shortcuts to popular features like Refine Edge and the Liquify Tools are also available on the panel. We've also got some better keystroke shortcuts for viewing specific filters, which is something we kept hearing about from readers. If you can imagine productivity levels being better with a notebook, then the screen technology you're probably using at home is probably preventing you from being on the cloud. Adobe had a similar snag. That's why it takes hours to do a simple command like 'Connect to Adobe Lightroom Online'. And why you can't do anything in offline mode. So the iOS apps are a step in the right direction. But this is just a first step, because they are not finally total solutions. Another problem of the underlying technology is that the older versions of iOS are not able to display the full gallery of your RAW files. So if you have a slideshow on your iPad, you're missing out on RAW footage (and the extra looks) that your initial preview displays. Lightroom CC 4.2 updated the "views" feature of Photos & Artwork to give you quicker access to your videos, documents, and other files you try to work on. The panel of various artboards you can work on has been replaced with a more organized interface featuring your different artboards on separate tabs. You can choose to see all your artboards at once or zoom in to your most-used artboards to see them in the middle of everything else. Cards are now hidden by default in the top menu bar, and they stay there until you uncheck 'Hide Cards' in the same bar.

It's a great way to find and download apps that are useful to me. Paying a little bit of money for those apps is well worth it. Downloading an app from the Mac App Store is easy to do. Install the app of your choice. When prompted to upgrade the app or not, choose not to. MacOS will remind you that the app needs to be updated if you log in to your account in the future. If you don't ever log into an Apple ID account, you won't be prompted again. If you want to be super-sure not to be bothered again, you can also select Not Now from the beginning screen of your Mac. This will automatically download the latest version of the app for you and only shows you the app on your home screen, never bothering you again.
