Field of the Invention The present invention relates to rotary encoders or transducers, and more particularly to the electronic circuitry and method of controlling the operation of such transducers. 2. Description of the Prior Art Rotary encoders or transducers typically comprise a plurality of magnetic elements mounted on a shaft at regular angular intervals about the shaft, each magnetic element generating a magnetic flux responsive to movement of the magnetic element in a given direction about the shaft. A plurality of permanent magnets are usually disposed adjacent the magnetic elements, the permanent magnets responding to the flux generated by the magnetic elements to generate a magnetic field which is provided to a sensor to provide an electrical output. Typical encoders include a plurality of magnetic elements and a plurality of permanent magnets for each element, the magnetic elements being typically disposed on a disk-shaped substrate and the permanent magnets being disposed on a ring-shaped hub. Encoders of this type typically use magnetostrictive sensors to detect the magnetic field generated by the magnetic elements. Encoders which use magnetostrictive sensors are typically fabricated by assembling the disk-shaped substrate and the hub into a single unit, applying
